A cluster of tea leaves with a few stragglers at the front at the bottom of the cup signifies a hearse or a funeral, while the couple of leaves at the bottom, if close together, signify a wedding. If the tea grounds take the form of a woman on the side of the cup it signifies a rival in love; if it looks like a bird it means news from a distant friend; if it looks like a book it refers to a well-known acquaintance who is at college; if it looks like a tree it means soon taking a journey into the country; if two stalks come together it means that you are to meet a man; if it looks like a snake it is an enemy. If it is a dog, you will meet or hear from a friend; if it looks like a house or a shed, it means that when you are married you will keep house for yourself and not board; if it looks like a spire, it means you will be married in church; if it looks like a duck or a swan, it means that you will cross the ocean; if it looks like a bridge, it is an understood sign that your marriage will be happy and your life long and sweet. If it looks like a man fishing with a rod, It points to a preagher who may either officlate at your marriage or become your husband; if it looks like a man with many spots lying before him it means that your husband will be rich, and may be a banker; if a broken bridge turns up on one side of the cup, it means that your marriage will be unhappy. New Style Head Gear to Be Worn To-Day if Weather Is Pleasant.

Several Rather Loud Shades to Be Introduced This Spring Season-Little Bonnets for Theater.

All the millinery openings were held during the past week. When the trees put on their new garb and the grass its fresh color, it has for many years been considered the proper time for humanity to make a change from winter dress, and as Easter, the great church festival, comes in the spring, sometimes early, however, it has been chosen as the time for people to come out in some new apparel. There are some people who say they have heard that it is good luck to come out in something new on Easter, just as a bride believes that it means a fair fortune if she wears something old, something new, something borrowed and something blue when she becomes a Mrs., and these same people, who would scorn the idea of being superstitious, begin at the top and appear in a new hat

Whenever the spring openings are held it means weeks of rush for milliners, and promised to be early in the week ready for the opening. Most milliners go East to see what will be the fashion for the coming season, and to buy hats and bonnets that are said to have come from England and France. The former country seems to furnish the fashlons for the street and common hats, and France the evening and dress bonnets. There are some astonishing combinations this year, just as there are, or always seem to be, every year. There are large hats and small bonnets, and smaller, if possible, than ever beated. The dresses were levely. The house was adorned with flags, Japanese lanterns and potted flowers. All the children were flowers, and the flowers are of reds and purples, side. We have more graves to decorate flowers. These are of reds and purples, side. We have more graves to decorate and the flowers. and are what would have struck horror to a shopper a few seasons ago as horribly ugly. The queer shades of purple with enough red to make it look like a cheap blue overcoat after two seasons' wear. Nothing is too gorgeous. On one and the same hat there may be blue, purple, red, pink and green, not to say anything of the color of the foundation, which may be of straw or lace.

Just as one is attracted by bright colors and odd shapes, these constitute the main points of the hats and bonnets which appeared in the windows and show cases. When the covers were lifted from the boxes inside the store, plainer headwear came to light. The several wholesale houses had crowds of milliners in to see the styles from the smaller towns of the State, and these factors of fashion gathered up ideas from the leading houses, which send their milliners away to do the same thing in New York. Thus the little fish feed on the big fish, inversely to the old adage. The people who crowd the stores to see the Easter bonnets are an interesting lot. If one can stand the crowd and the pushing, it becomes a fine place to study femininity. There is the young woman who is pretty and knows it, and she tries on all of the handsome hats; there is the young mar-ried woman who wants a hat, just awfully, for Easter, but her husband holds the pocket book, and was not inclined to understand what she wanted when she told him of hundreds of women who were down town buying hats; there is the woman who wants a bonnet so much, and goes down just to see what there is and what other women are buying, but who has made up her mind that she will let her last year's hat do for another season. This last woman knows that she will be of this mind for at least a month, when she will go down after every one else has bought a bonnet and she will take what is left. There is the woman who is poor and loves nice things, and goes down and tries on hats just to see how very nice she will look

"when her ship comes in." THE EXASPERATING WOMAN. Another woman, who is more than exasperating to the milliner and to every other person in the bonnet department, is the one who goes early and secures the head of the department and hangs on to her, making her get out hat after hat, and bonnet after bonnet, and asking all kinds of questions, pertinent and impertinent, knowing when she entered the place that she would not buy, but just enjoys keeping the milliner from waiting on anyone else. Everybody has seen her and, as the girl said, "experienced her." To give a faint idea of what milliners have brought out, a brief description will help some one to form an opinion of what linery. Something which will delight theater and opera-goers is the evening bonnets. The newest are for those who have pretty hair and know how to dress it be-comingly. The hat, if it may be dignified with the term, is simply a band of ribbon or jet about an inch wide which just fits the head. On the front of this is a bow of ribbon, rather a wide bow, and at the back is a bunch of flowers. It is only an excuse of a bonnet, but it adorns the head and is so small that, while it is something for the head, it cannot keep the neighbor behind from seeing the stage. In New York these bonnets are all the rage, and after the matinees the ladies may be seen going home with these bonnets on.

Perhaps next in size are the English turbans, for street wear. These have a flat and broad effect and are trimmed with very broad bows and buckles and a bunch of flowers. Violets lead in the decoration of the turbans. The English walking hats are larger, but they follow the same general styles in trimming that the turbans have.

NEW KIND OF TRIMMING. There are very few of the nice hats that do not have some jet on them. A new kind of trimming is called the "flitter." It is a flat jet, or something akin to jet, for it has the effect of jet, but may be had in any of the fashionable colors or shades. Its shape is like a spangle and it is held to the hat, bonnet or lace with a single bead in the center. There are scores of hats that are covered with the flitter trimming, and when one has this, there is need for but little else, a bow and flowers completing its decoration. A small hat in one of the windows gives a good representation of what will be worn for calls and receptions. This had a fine straw crown with a lace brim, and at the back there was a butterfly bow of fine lace and a bunch of flowers. A second one, almost a counterpart of it, had a bunch of roses. A Leghorn hat of last summer may be made lovely for this season. It was turned up in an odd way at the back and the brim was covered with black dotted lace, a velvet bow of black, while a bunch of over the crown. A pretty Leghorn had a black lace butterfly bow on the back and a broad bow with a jet buckle on the front. Around the top of the crown was a wreath of violets and there was no top to the hat, the wearer's hair to show through the open space. A novel hat had a wide brim of black lace and a tall crown of black watered silk. Prince of Wales feathers and shaded velvet roses were the trimming. A bonnet, quite unlike any other, was made of a lace handkerchief. The lace was wired to the desired shape and the crown was made of fine straw; lace bows and flowers composed the trimming. One hat seen had a black lace brim and a lavender straw crown and one trimming was of butterfly bows of yellow crape and buckles A light green small bonnet was of moire. embroidered with silver, and its trimming was of double purple pansies, a black satin bow and aigrettes of black. A three-cornered jet bonnet had a bunch of black violets at each corner and across the back was a bunch of green stems. All parts of the flowers appear in the trimming of the hats and bonnets, and all colors and kinds may be seen on the same article. Hundreds of people are ready with their new hats or bonnets for Easter, but the weather will determine whether the government and from their unfortunate public will be allowed to gaze on the beauties that day or will have to wait for a return of the May weather of the early

GRAND ARMY NOTES

Commander-in-Chief Adams's Order on Memorial Day Observance.

The Indiana Encampment-Important Proposition Regarding the Muster Out of Posts-A Pathetic Story.

The order of Commander-in-chief Adams regarding the observance of Memorial day has been sent to the several departments Sections 1 and 2 are as follows:

"1. Wednesday, May 30 next, will be ob served as Memorial day. Twenty-six years ago John A. Logan, commander-in-chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, in gen eral orders No. 11, inaugurated Memorial day. In that general order we were directed that if other eyes grow dull, and other hands slack, and other hearts cold in the solemn trust, we shall keep it well as long as the light and warmth of life remains in us.' His wishes and instructions have been faithfully obeyed, and as his successor I call upon you, my comrades, to again discharge this most solemn duty.

and fewer comrades to discharge the duty. Realizing this, let us invite all the people, especially the Woman's Relief Corps, Sons of Veterans, and children of the public In no better way can we teach lessons of patriotism and prepare those who are to take our places for the high and responsible duties of American citizens. Section 3 urges the continuance of the beautiful custom of posts attending church the Sunday previous to Memorial day. Subsequent sections remind posts that in 1877 the National Encampment gave the designation of "Memorial day" to May 30, and that all flags be hoisted at half mast on that day.

THE STATE ENCAMPMENT. The State encampment at Lafayette is now attracting the attention of the posts. Lafayette is preparing to take care of all who may attend. The fact that the State Soldiers' Home has been located near Lafayette gives additional interest to the meeting the first week in April. The citizens will run steamers up the river to the location. It is probable that positive action will be taken to insure a speedy occupaand the city of Lafayette have donated the Grand Army for a State sodiers' home. The occasion of half fares will afford others an opportunity to visit Purdue University and examine the facilities which it offers for practical education. Among the important matters which will come before the encampment is the proposition of Col. B. C. Shaw, a delegate from Thomas Post, relative to the method of mustering out or the dissolution of posts. The present rules provide for the surrender of the post charters and all the rec-ords to department headquarters under certain conditions, thus putting the post records in a mass, in possible danger in time to wholesale destruction and loss to posterity. By the proposed plan, under similar conditions, duplicate rolls of the entire membership of a post, giving the army service and descriptive list of each member of the post, from the beginning, will be made up, including their post record, and upon the department headquarters having been duly notified of their readiness the department commander will fix a date when he or his representative will appear before the sur-viving members of the post, in a public meeting, where the post will be duly mus-tered out with appropriate ceremonies. The post charter and one copy of the muster-out roll will be turned over, after being duly attested, to a local committee charged with the duty of their preservation in the most appropriate public manner as the au-

The various changes in the rules and regulations and the necessary new sections are set forth in the same paper. Additional rules to be requested to carry out the new order for mustering posts out of the Grand Army and providing for the restoration of members to their original numbers who, through inability, or even carelessness, have permitted their names to be dropped from the membership of the post.

The plan has been approved by the comrades, to whom it has been submitted for advice and encouragement, and will no the National Encampment for final action. It would seem to be a fitting programme for the soldier organizations, doomed by nature to short duration as a living body place of their organization, and among the thentic public record of their life and servwould be a valuable souvenir and positive proof of their service to their country. Of Corporal James Tanner every Gravi Army man has heard and many have seen him. He has just been suffering a reamputation of both legs. Of Sergeant David litcher, of the same Brooklyn post of the Grand Army, few have heard. He was wounded in the hip at Fredericksburg. For years he has been a silent sufferer, so affected by the yet open wound that he can-not get out of doors. The two veterans are fast friends. While in the hospital being treated Corporal Tanner sent flowers to his friend and comrade with this message: "I am bouyed up by the thought of the patience which enables you to endure an affliction worse than mine.'

The day that Corporal Tanner insisted upon leaving the hospital he was yet helpless, but he had his friends drive him around to the house in which Sergeant Pitcher 6c-cupies the second floor. Neither could move. but the helpless man in the carriage saluted and smiled and the helpless man in the win-dow returned both. Neither could speak so that the other could hear, even if their voices had not been drowned in tears. To his friend Tanner turned: "Major," he whispered, "go up, please, and shake hands with Sergeant Pitcher and saucy red and yellow silk roses kept guard | say, 'Good day and God bless you,' for me to him." The Major went up and delivered the message with a quavering voice. The Sergeant braced up and said to his wife: "My dear, please go down and shake hands with Corporal Tanner for me, and thank him for his call and wish him a speedy re-The Sergeant's wife went down and when she had done as bid Major Wright got into the carriage and told the driver to start.

Then Sergeant Pitcher in the window kissed his hand to Corporal Tanner in the carriage. The Corporal kissed his hand back and the carriage rolled away.

MISERIES OF RUSSIAN SOLDIERS. In No Other Army Are the Men Treated with Such Barbarity.

With the exception of the regiments of the Guards-a mere plaything of the Czar-the Russian soldier is a miserable-looking object, sickly, and dressed in a uniform out of all proportion to his stature. He is wretchedly paid, always half-famished, and, in fact, appears more qualified to be defended than to defend. One has not to go far to find the reason for this. The Russian commanders have, almost in every instance, sought their positions, not in the hope of proving useful to the state, but with an eye to the riches which will accrue to them in the shape of plunder from the

In no other army are such cruelties practiced upon soldiers as in that of Russia.
